The Farm Costs and Returns Survey measures sources of farm income:

... and farm expenses:

1992 figures

The survey information has a major impact when a farm operator visits a local Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service office, because policymakers rely on it heavily when developing and adjusting farm programs.

- 1 You are one of only 12,000 farm operators nationwide who will be interviewed for the Farm Costs and Returns Survey.

- 2 Survey data are processed, analyzed, and released to the public in several reports that provide the foundation for national news stories on U.S. agriculture, and therefore have great influence on Americans' view of farming.

The Farm Costs and Returns Survey is important because it reveals the bottom line on agriculture: whether farmers and ranchers are earning a profit or sustaining a loss.

3

University extension economists use the information to identify the strengths and weaknesses of agriculture in their States and to develop educational programs to meet operators' needs.

4

Farm and commodity groups use the survey information in their recommendations to the Secretary of Agriculture and communications with Congress, their members, and the general public.

Survey participants may receive a free Individual Farm Financial Analysis, which can help pinpoint an operation's strengths and weaknesses through a series of comparisons with regional averages.

We know that your time is very valuable, but this is your chance to help us develop a true picture of the economic facts of farm life. Having your records handy will help the interview go smoothly.

Participation is voluntary, but we would greatly appreciate your time and cooperation for this valuable survey.
